Over the next year, help us continue to keep children in vulnerable situations safe.

Situation in Bangladesh

Children living in Rohingya refugee camps in Bangladesh are often in environments that are not healthy or safe. These children have experienced trauma from situations they have seen. It is easy for children to be taken advantage of as there are no safe places they can go to ensure they are protected in a refugee camp.

Though school offers children safety, many parents can't afford the fees required. Children may be left on their own, which opens them up to unsafe situations.

Child Friendly Spaces are places where children can go for safety, but also learning and fun. Children's psychological and social needs can be met in a nurturing environment where they are looked after.

You can help us provide Child Friendly Spaces where children know they are loved and cared for.

How You Can Help Children in Bangladesh

In partnership with Pentecostal Assemblies of Bangladesh (PAOB), ERDO will be providing Child Friendly Spaces in Rohingya refugee camps to bring psychosocial support to children, giving them a safe place to play and learn.

This two-year program will provide age-appropriate programs for 250 children every week, 5 days a week on a rotational basis. Children ages 3-15 years old will have access to holistic support through age-appropriate entertainment, education and socialization. They will also receive a meal for their physical well-being. Children will have access to toys and other play materials, traditional games and crafts. They will also get to take part in cultural activities, such as plays, dances and singing. This project will reach children who have dropped out of school or who have not attended school before, as well as children living with a disability.

Child Friendly Spaces provide structure, fun activities, safety, socialization and adult supervision, as well as safe environments for kids to learn and grow. Having structured activities help build resilience and are found to prevent children from developing further psychological problems as they get older. Child Friendly Spaces allow adults to monitor any protection issues that may affect children and properly report them. Children of all ages can access a place where they are loved and cared for in the midst of the difficulties they face.

Thank you for helping us keep children in Bangladesh safe!
